Explore+Discover Launches Parent Education Series Addresses Critical Issues of Infant and Toddler Care & Education

NEW YORK (April 28, 2014) –Explore+Discover, an early learning center, is launching a series of interactive seminars for parents that will deal with an expanding array of infant and toddler care and education issues.

The Parent Education Series will begin with a co-hosted event on May 21 with My Learning Springboard on the educational benefits of the Reggio Emilia approach to education. On June 1 Explore+Discover will hosted another event focused on the positive impact of tummy-time for infants that will include a presentation by Dan Rindler, Director of Child’Space NYC. Rindler will demonstrate how Child’Space’s interactive approach to infants can help babies achieve true tummy-time comfort.

“These are just the first of many free parent events we will be holdings during the next year,” said Renee Bock, Explore+Discover Educational Director. “Engaging parents on critical issues is central to Explore+Discover’s mission to set a standard for infant and toddler care and education.”

Explore+Discover is an emerging force in early childhood education. The group will open the first of more than 20 New York City centers this September for children 3 months to 2 years old. The inaugural center will be located at 444 Second Avenue (26th Street) in the Kips Bay/Gramercy Park region of Manhattan. The 5,000-square-foot facility includes eight classrooms, a community gathering space and an enclosed outdoor play area, among other features.

Explore+Discover’s model is built on a comprehensive approach that includes a highly trained staff, an arts-oriented responsive curriculum and an innovative environment that is specifically geared to support the learning process of young children. The combined impact promotes social, physical and cognitive growth.

Explore+Discover Launches Parent Education Series

“Unleashing the full potential of young children and putting them on a pathway towards a lifetime of learning requires the right environment, professional teachers, engaged parents and a curriculum that responds to infants and toddlers. Our Parent Education Series hopefully will build a strong support system for children whether they attend Explore+Discover’s center or not,” Bock added.
